The HUMOURIST. No. III.

So ancient is the Pedigree of Verſe,
And ſo divine a Poet's Function.
ROSCOMMON.

I HAVE ever been of Opinion that dramatic Performances promote good Purpoſes: They purify our Minds and enlarge our Underſtandings, tho', of the two kinds, Tragedy tends moſt to our Inſtruction.

A good Tragedy is a noble Lecture, full fraught with the Precept and the Moral, as we find them ſo delightfully diffuſed through the whole Syſtem of Philoſophy; the Mind is ennobled by the Sentiments, the Paſſions are rectified by the very Paſſions themſelves, and calm, by their Emotions, the alternate Palpitations of the Heart.

There are two predominant Rulers of the Soul, Pride and Cruelty, that ſtand in need of Regulation; this particular Branch of the Drama alone, ſo tempers the Affections, and ſubdues the unruly Operations of the Mind, that Pride ſtarts at its own Authority, and Cruelty ſoftly graduates into the ſweet Path of kind Compaſſion.

If we turn over the Records of the Drama, we ſhall find, that it is a firſt Principle to promote Modeſty; and there is certainly no Method ſo effectual, as that of enforcing our Doctrine by Examples, by figuring to Mankind the moſt ſplendid Stations of Life, and repreſenting the Heroes of the World humbled, by thoſe very Acts of Heroiſm which rather diſtinguiſhed an ambitious than a virtuous Impulſe.

It requires no ſmall Experience of Mankind, to be made acquainted with thoſe Occurrences of Life, that are neceſſary in order to guard againſt the firſt riſings of Evil.

The tragic Scene repreſents to us the Neceſſity of Tenderneſs on the one Hand, and that kind of Compaſſion which dictates a proper Diſtinction of Misfortunes on the other, and teaches us to ſpare our Pity for thoſe only who deſerve it. There is undoubtedly an Injuſtice, in being moved for that Man whoſe Behaviour can intitle him only to Diſgrace. Who does not take a ſecret Pleaſure in beholding Clytemneſtra ſinking into the Arms of Death, after having committed a Murder of an heinous Nature? When I ſay that ſhe kill'd her Huſband Agamemnon, my Pen denies its Maſter, my Hand forgets its Function, and every Faculty of the Soul its diſtinct and ſeparate Operation.

The Origin of Tragedy was purely a religious Worſhip, but afterwards it deſcended from the Temples to the Theatre, 'till it was allayed by ſecular Direction, and ſerved as the juſt Image and Repreſentation of human Life.

Athens was the foſtering Soil for dramatick Poetry; there it bloſſom'd and pour'd forth its Fruit; and who can wonder at the Veneration Tragedy was held even in thoſe early Days, when we conſider that Athens was the Place for more than Wit, ſolid Learning.

A Tragedy is, or ought to be, intereſting; and where it is ſo, the Judgment furniſhes us with thoſe variety of Paſſions that will not ſuffer the Mind to lie lull'd ſupine, or eaſy. Whatever may become the Brave, or the Unfortunate; whatever may agree with the Indulgence of a kind Parent, or a faithful Friend, are nobly diſplayed in Performances of this Nature; nothing diſcovering that cloſe Connexion between Poets and Painters more graphically, than the different Peinture they excel in, the one in the outward Lineaments of the Face and Body, the other in the inward Temperament of the Mind.

The Drama is always new, becauſe it always affects; there is no Argument of ſuch Weight in favour of our Tenderneſs, as the being moved and excited at the Occurrences of a good Play.

It was always eſteemed by the Ancients: If Lycurgus was a Law-giver and Patron, Solon was a Brother to the Muſes; if Alexander made Homer his nocturnal Pillow, it was becauſe the Story bordered ſo nearly on dramatick Writings. There runs the true Spirit of real Life and Action through the whole.

If theſe Efforts of the Genius were ſo regarded by the Ancients, and look'd upon even with an Eye of Reverence, I might juſtly add Adoration, we Moderns are every way juſtified in imbibing the ſame Notions, and embracing the ſame Sentiments.

I am now ſpeaking of thoſe Plays whoſe Story forms a Moral: I cannot be ſuppoſed to mean otherwiſe, nor can any Man of Senſe; becauſe Immorality and Vice are the Refuge of thoſe People only, who ſtand in need of better Endowments, a good Genius and an honeſt Soul.

To the HUMOURIST.

Ridentem dicere verum,
Quid vetat. HOR.

SIR,

AS I have always held thoſe who practiſe Phyſic in great Contempt, it gave me much Pleaſure to find my Opinion of that Profeſſion confirmed, not only by the Judgment of Pope Adrian the VIth, but by the Humouriſt himſelf. You indeed are benevolent enough, to allow them a greater Share of inward and outward Knowledge than moſt of them have a Right to; but, granting they had all that you are pleaſed to beſtow on them, how badly do they conform to the Leſſon of the Oracle; for we have Reaſon to conclude, from their Behaviour, that they trouble their Heads as little with an Inſpection into their own moral Conduct, as with an honeſt Concern for the Welfare of their Patients. I have the Honour likewiſe to agree, in the Main, with his Holineſs, in his political Opinion of this Tribe, for were it not for the Phyſician, Men would live ſo long, and grow ſo THICK, that ONE could not live for the OTHER; and he makes the Earth cover all his Faults. I ſay, my Judgment is the ſame, in the Main, with this good Pope's, as ſhall be made appear afterwards; but a ſmall Dilemma occurs, for I cannot, without ſhuddering, think of the miſerable Condition of Men, did they live ſo long, and grow ſo thick, that ONE could not LIVE for the OTHER, for in that Caſe, it ſeems, that every Mother's Son of them muſt ſurely die, and at the ſame Time too (when one could no longer live for the other); or elſe, the leaſt ill Conſequence would be, that the ſmall ones would be trodden down and cruſhed to Death in the Croud by the great ones; but we are in no Danger of any ſuch Misfortune (if there is no Soleciſm in the Pope's Words) for Phyſic ſteps in and luckily prevents it. What he ſays is literally true, that were it not for the Phyſician, Men would live long, and might grow THICK too, for indeed, Mr. Humouriſt, what Man can live long, and grow thick, under a Diet of Pills, Boluſes, Sage-Tea, and Water-Gruel? I will venture an even Wager, that any Man, be he ever ſo thick, will grow thin and dwindle under ſuch a Regimen; nay more, that he will not live long: The Experiment may eaſily be tried on yourſelf, if you prove too thick for your thin Aerial Manſion. It ſeems very juſt likewiſe, that the Phyſician ſhould finiſh his Work, by burying the Dead, and make the Earth cover all his Faults; and it is probable, it was formerly his Duty ſo to do, as it is Jack-catch's at preſent; but I fear their Fees would be too high for this Office, and many of the Poor might lie and rot above Ground, wherefore this ſhall not be inſiſted on. It plainly appears then, from what You, Pope Adrian, and Myſelf have ſaid, that Phyſic is ſo far from being a deſireable Profeſſion, either in a moral or political Senſe, that it is deſtructive, and aims at the Extirpation of the human Species: To ſay more of it, would be ſuperfluous. Law, on the other Hand, is unerring in its Deciſions; for, who ever found himſelf aggrieved by its Decrees, which the moſt obſtinate muſt not acquieſce in; and why ſhould he not? ſure, what it decrees muſt be be juſt? It muſt alſo be granted, that Divinity would be of ſome Uſe to the World, if Men would but root out the Corruption of their Hearts, that they might profit by the Doctrine and Example of the Profeſſors of it, but 'till that can be done, much Good, I fear, is not to be expected from it.

The following Doggrel Lines, were compoſed by ſome ſnarling Fellow, who ſeems to have been no Friend to either of the Profeſſions, but ſuch as they are, you are welcome to them.

The TRIPLE FLEA.

LAW, Phyſic, and Divinity,
Being in diſpute, could not agree,
To ſettle, which, among the three,
Should have the ſuperiority.

Law pleads, that he preſerves men's lands,
And all their goods, from rav'nous hands;
Therefore of right challenges He,
To have the ſuperiority.

Phyſic preſcribes receipts for health,
Which men prefer above their Wealth;
Therefore of right challenges He,
To have the ſuperiority.

Then ſtrait ſteps up the Prieſt demure,
Who of men's ſouls takes care and cure;
Therefore of right challenges He,
To have the ſuperiority.

If Judges end this triple Plea,
The Lawyers ſhall bear all the ſway.
If Empiricks their verdict give,
Phyſicians beſt of all ſhall thrive;

If Biſhops arbitrate the caſe,
The Prieſt ſhall have the higheſt place.
If honeſt, ſober, wiſe men judge,
Then all the three away may trudge.

For let men live in peace and love,
The Lawyer's tricks they need not prove;
Let them avoid exceſs and riot,
They need not feed on Doctor's diet.

Let them attend what God does teach,
They need not care what Parſon's preach.
But if men fools, and knaves will be,
They'll be Aſs-ridden by all three.

PARIS, Sept. 14.

THEY write from Rouen, that the commiſſaries appointed to examine the king's anſwer to the laſt remonſtrances of that parliament have made their report, and it is ſaid, that in conſequence of their opinion, it has been reſolved, not to regiſter the ſaid anſwer, but to make freſh remonſtrances to his majeſty, and that the ſpeech which the premier preſident made to the king on the 2d inſt. having been inſerted among the regiſters of the parliament, without the conſent or knowledge of moſt of the members, is ordered to be eraſed and blotted out.

Rouen, Sept. 19. Yeſterday morning three couriers arrived here from Verſailles. Count de St. Florentine ſaid in his letter, 'that the 'king was greatly diſpleaſed that the parliament 'had not regiſtered his orders; and that his ma'jeſty commanded them to continue their ſit'tings, and obey his letters patent of the 5th 'inſtant?' The chambers having met the ſame morning and read theſe letters, declared, that they had no intention to break up, as appeared by their arret of the 12th. M. de Franqueville, counſellor of the grand chamber, was ſcarce got into his houſe when it was ſurrounded by a party of the dragoons quartered in this town, and the exempt who was at their head, going in, preſented a letter de cachet, declaring M. de Franqueville a ſtate priſoner, and ordering him to be carried to the citadel of Doullens in Picardie, which is within the juriſdiction of the parliament of Paris. That worthy magiſtrate having given directions about his private affairs came to the door about half an hour after the 2, and told the guard he was ready to go with them. He was immediately hurried away in a chaiſe, eſcorted by eight dragoons. His lady had ſet out a little before to keep him company, and ſhare in his misfortune. All the inhabitants, particularly the nobleſſe and the members of parliament, croud to his houſe to expreſs to him their their concern at his disgrace, and to encourage him to persist in the good cause; but being a state prisoner he was not permitted to speak to them.

London, Sept. 29. Our correspondent at Paris acquaints us, that public affairs become more and more embarassed. The wiser sort of people stand astonished at the strange events that happen every day; as for instance, the prince de Soubize treating the whole camp he commands on the Sambre upon the birth of the Duke of Aquitaine. Upon this occasion 8000 supped in perfect order, while the camp was in a manner invested by all the violins of the country.

Paris, Sept. 21. The parliament of Normandy is in an extreme critical situation. The last letters from Rouen intimate, that the members of that body, and the inhabitants of that city heartily interested themselves in the fate of M. Barteau de Franqueville, counsellor of the great chamber, who has been sent prisoner to the castle of Dourlens in Picardy: That the chambers being assembled on the 17th, commissaries were appointed to draw up a justification of that magistrate, in favour of whom M. du Fougueres and the intendant have, it is said, wrote to court. These letters add, that the advocates and attornies have again shut up their offices, and that the list of causes which were to have been tried during the vacation, has been withdrawn.

Paris, Sept. 24. They write from Rouen, that the parliament of that city had lately received two letters from court, whereby it was intimated to that company, that his majesty revoked the lettre de cachet sent to M. de Franqueville, and permitted that worthy magistrate to return from the castle of Dourlens to Rouen.

Paris A-la-main, Oct. 1. It being necessary to register the king's letters patent for establishing the chamber of vacations, in order to give them the force of a law, which cannot be done in parliament, on account of the members being separated, they have been carried to the chatelet, which accordingly assembled in order to take this affair into consideration; but the members of this tribunal being of opinion that they could not register these letters patent, have come to a resolution, in which they assign their reasons for not proceeding to the said registry.

Paris, Oct. 1. It is said that the goaler of the chatelet is put in prison, for refusing to deliver up a prisoner to the chamber of vacations, alledging, that he was an officer belonging to the chatelet, and therefore could not acknowledge their authority.

The parliament of Rouen has caused a work, entitled, remonstrances of the parliament of Rouen, to be burnt by the common hangman.

London, Oct. 13. Our correspondent at Paris assures us, that the oldest men in France never remember any such scene as the present: The magistrates of a little town have had the courage and honesty to attack and detect a false edict of the council of state, sent to quash a sentence of theirs; and have demonstrated, from a variety of circumstances, that if this edict for reversing their sentence was ever made, it was made before the sentence was given. The chatelet having peremptorily refused to establish the edict for a chamber of vacations, the chamber have affirmed their own power, and ordered it to be registered themselves. The meaneft Officers of the parliament and chatelet remain firm, and have declared, that tho' they cannot support the law, they will suffer with it, on which noble principle the keeper of the chatelet is actually a prisoner in his own goal, being committed by the new high court of justice.

PARIS-A-LA-MAIN, Oct. 8. The officers of the chatelet having refused, at a meeting held the 28th of last month, to register the king's letters patents for establishing a chamber of vacations, an arret of the council of state has been published, with his majesty's letters patents upon the same, declaring the said meeting to be invalid, and forbidding the officers of the chatelet to hold any such meetings for the future. These letters patents authorise the chamber of vacations to proceed to the registries of the chatelet, and make such erasements there as are mentioned in the arret. In consequence of this arret and letters patents, the chamber of vacations sent deputies last friday to the chatelet, who proceeded to the erasements above-mentioned, and to the registry of the arret and letters patents.

Paris-a-la-Main, Oct. 22. It's assured, that the [illegible] which the deputies of the chamber of vacation went to the chatelet to execute the orders of the king, the members of that tribunal, immediately after the deputies were withdrawn, caused the registers to be brought 'em and replaced all that had been erased.

LONDON, Oct. 18. Our correspondent at Paris acquaints us, that the firmness of the chatelet, and more especially of the meaner officers, who, with unexpected steadiness, have resisted promises as well as threatnings, will probably give a turn to the dispute that has lasted so long, more especially as there appears a greater unwillingness in the people to have their causes heard before the new chamber of vacations, from an apprehension, that when the parliament shall be re-established all the sentences given by that court will be quashed.

Paris-a la Main, Oct. 16. The affairs which occasioned the misunderstanding between the clergy and the parliament seem to take a very favourable turn, from whence we flatter ourselves that an accommodation is near at hand. The founda ion of these favourable conjectures is, the great number of couriers that are continually sending to the villages where the several members are in exile, and the orders which are given to prepare lodgings at Pontoise, for the reception of the exiled counsellors who are going to be recalled. It is moreover said, that in order to contribute to this accommodation, the court, the clergy, and the parliament, have each of them given up some points which were the occasion of their misunderstanding.
